

Unfortunately, in the meantime, the only foolproof method of avoiding shark attack (in Reunion or elsewhere) is to stay out of the water. A recent spate of shark attacks on Reunion Island has led to calls for a shark cull by famous surfer Kelly Slater.

A couple of spots at Reunion island are also protected by a coral reef and those places are the only spots on Reunion where you're allowed to go into the water without the presence of the safety net or the diver scouts. Bull shark, an amazing animal capable of surviving in both salt & fresh water.

An estimated 73 million sharks are killed each year, and both bull sharks and tiger sharks are classified as Near Threatened on the IUCN Red List. In 2013, Reunion authorities reacted to a peak of five attacks in one year by banning surfing and swimming everywhere on Reunion except for in the island's lagoons.

Another theory is that the deep drop-offs that surround Reunion allow pelagic species like tiger sharks to come close inshore in search of food. Natural shark populations flourished after the island banned the fishing of sharks for food in 1999.

The attack is one of dozens to have occurred on the Indian Ocean Island over the decades. Reunion Island has become so notorious for shark attacks, swimming and surfing is banned outside the coral lagoon.
